Improved Bootlegging
—By Arthur Brisbane

INSPIRING news from Germany, where at the moment they are building a plane intended to fly 100 feet above the clouds at 100 to 150 miles an hour, to make the trip from Berlin to New York in six hours. This will come in time, although this machine may have its troubles.

The plane, with a "flexible" body, will have no wheels and other landing gear. Oxygen will be fed to the engine, passengers will travel in an airtight compartment, manufacturing their atmosphere as they go along. We may have our champagne and its attendant stoppage, but science doesn't stop.

THE entire salmon industry, important to the people and the prosperity of this continent, moves in Seattle to discuss its future. Continued on Page Two

TORCH APPLIED TO STEAMSHIP

Old Hudson's Bay Boat is Destroyed at Peace River

Exclusive to Edmonton Bulletin
PEACE RIVER, Alta., Oct. 22.—The steamer Albion, which has been standing on the bank here for the past 10 years and used as a warehouse by the owners, the Hudson's Bay Company, went up in a spectacular blaze when the torch was applied to it. Preparations for the burning of the old steamer were made two weeks ago when it was lowered down the side of the bank. It was the form of an official's cabin, the lower temperature and the rain on the day of the burning. The fire was so intense that the flames had consumed the entire structure in a matter of minutes. The fire was so intense that the flames had consumed the entire structure in a matter of minutes.

While reports from the outside show considerable loss of life, the steamer has not been so affected. Spontaneous combustion has occurred very frequently during the past 10 years, but very little damage has been done. Although the temperature has been high enough to melt the lead in some localities, it has been carried on the bank. The fire has been so intense that the flames had consumed the entire structure in a matter of minutes.

It is, however, recalled that the month of October has been a record for a severe cold snap of short duration followed by several weeks of heavy rain. The temperature has been so low that the water has frozen in places. The fire was so intense that the flames had consumed the entire structure in a matter of minutes.

The old Dominion government telegraph office building, built in 1912 at a time when it had a distinction of being the most palatial structure in the north country, is being moved on to a new site by the contractor, who recently acquired the building. The structure is being moved on to a new site by the contractor, who recently acquired the building.

SNOW HILLS THERING
INISFREE, Oct. 22.—The snow-hill of the past three days has again held up threatening operations. Fully two-thirds of the grain is still in the stack, while the highway between Inisfree and Leno is blocked by snowdrifts and cars are unable to get through.

"GET IT AT WOODWARD'S"

Murders At Sea

"Surely—no, no sorry. Come." He said lunch ready. But Hawley was not hungry. He was anxious to get to the bottom of the affair. But it was after two before he could get to the room. Quirk was with them, silent and a bit morose.

For Richter had removed the body. Dale's interest in it, as an exhibit, had declined to the zero point. The only thing that interested him was the fact that it was a woman. The stolen fifty thousand, for instance, unaccounted for except the in the message which was intended to tell her that she was coming to cover up Buick—or, I should say, Nelson—even after he was murdered. Obviously, the money.

But the three men stood in the corridor.

"You may look up number 33, Captain," said Richter, "and get a sense in our drama."

For the greater part of the afternoon the three men sat on the bed. He lay stretched out in a chair, his eyes closed, his body relaxed, as if "There were fifty thousand dollars stolen from a bank! Think the lady might be a thief?"

"Don't be a fool, Dale!"

There was a knock at the door. Dale opened it and bowed to Enid. Enid, York blushed and made a dash forward, subconsciously.

"I had a message from Captain Hawley—" She was undoubtedly beautiful — enchanting, fascinating — but more so than her sister. Her voice had a startling smoothness. She came into the room. Even York's presence brought no sign of surprise from her.

"This is Captain Hawley . . . if I may introduce myself. Miss Ferrell, I am Robin Dale . . . I sure you know Mr. Arkle."

She also, Richard thought, was a surprise party? She laughed lightly as she stepped into the centre of the stage.

"We were just discussing Mr. Burke

Only Dale, near the door, waiting for it to be heard the knock. He opened and Quirk burst in. "You're in York's? You're tumbling out on the chair."

"You don't know what you're talking about, Dick!" She was almost frantic.

"Yes, now! You're just a rotten little..."

Quirk had grabbed York and whirled him around. Quirk was living in a passion of uncontrollable anger.

"Don't say another word like that to me or I'll make it back into your dirty throat!"

York wringed himself free. Dale had crossed to Captain Hawley's desk and, with a restraining pressure on his arm, was the Captain's gesture of interference.

There was a strained, awful silence.

It seemed to last interminably. York made the first move. He rushed forth

According to information made public last night by the Harvard Business Bureau, $16 million dollars was involved, including 10,000 lost work days and six fatalities.

Stan At Airship Works Being Cut

Associated Press
CARDINGTON, Eng., Oct. 23.—As a consequence of destruction of the dirigible R-101 about one-third of the 180 employees of the airship works are being dismissed. But for the disaster there would have been work enough to maintain the full staff making spare parts for the R-101 and the R-100, but there being no present intention to repair the latter ship, dismissal was regarded as inevitable.

South Africa Will Not Complain of Conference Outcome Hertzog States

SAYS BRITISH FISCAL POLICY NOW AT STAKE

Dominions Cannot Expect Far-reaching Tariff Revolution

Canadian Press Cable
LONDON, Oct. 23.—South Africa recognizes that the future economic policy within the British Empire largely rests in Great Britain, and will have no quarrel with the outcome of any present Imperial conference, even if it means unpopularity in the Dominion, declared Prime Minister J. B. Hertzog in a speech in the House of Assembly here Wednesday night, which was broadcast to South Africa.

The British Commonwealth, the South African premier said, extends so far a far-reaching influence that the League of Nations itself, in advancing the peace and prosperity and happiness of the world. "If the present conference is not successful the reason for the failure must be sought in a particular set of circumstances and not any inherent weakness in Commonwealth co-operation," he pointed out.

While the conference labors in the field of economic co-operation, however, in the public eye, the South African Premier went on, other problems which were of the very greatest importance and significance were being disposed of. He emphasized the difficulty of solving the question of readjustment of the economic basis of Great Britain's fiscal policy in harmony with the economic needs of the various member states.

"If therefore the conference proves fruitless in its economic efforts, it does not mean that the individual requirements have failed to be met. It should not be forgotten that what is expected from Great Britain in order to satisfy the Dominion's requirements and also her own is largely what is expected from her in fiscal practice, no less than in economic theory," Premier Hertzog maintained.

Titled British Woman Grilled In Court

Asserting that money ruined her marriage with Dr. Paul Gassard, celebrated French radiologist, Lady Owen, Frenchwoman widow of Sir Theodore Charles Owen, is seen here when she was questioned into the shooting and mortally wounding of Mrs. Leonard Charles Owen, in court at Versailles. N.Y. NEWSBOY MAKING GOOD IN OLD PARIS

Marries Former English Actress—Speaks French Fluently

Bulletin News Special
NEW YORK, Oct. 23.—Down on Henry street, in the heart of the humble East Side, a mother is waiting for a visit from her son, who has become a familiar figure of Paris.

The son is Ike Miller and if you ask him to tell you about his great-aunt you will find him speaking as fluently as any American in Paris.

He is probably the best known newsboy in the world. Kings know him. He is the only one of his kind in Paris.

He is 22 years old, was then about 22 years old, was selling papers at Times Square, Manhattan. He lived with his mother and by considerable economy had saved $400.

One day as he was standing over a pile of papers, he got to thinking about how well a city New York could be at times. He decided to see some of the world beyond Broadway.

So the little job on a Swedish steamer to Europe. For three weeks he shovels coal for which he received his passage and $40 in wages.

He didn't take long to open his eyes. In Paris, where the men found him and stranded. He then took a French as a dishwasher in a restaurant. One day he was standing in front of the Café de la Paix, wishing he had some money to spend, when a woman got told him he looked like a good-looking American and asked him if he would like to get newspapers.

"That," said Ike, "is what I do best."

He returned to his original occupation and prospered. Now he is married to a former English actress and speaks French fluently with a New York East Side accent.

Every winter he goes to Nice to enjoy the fashionable with his own home. At Nice he met Miss Marie, a French actress, who was a regular customer, buying New York City papers and a certain popular American magazine.

Whenever Earl Carroll, the revue producer, is in Paris, Ike always looks him up. Carroll once gave Ike a topcoat before the newsboy became a bookkeeper.

Moscow Communist Newspaper Claims Victory For Gov't

Associated Press
MOSCOW, Oct. 23.—Inventor of the central executive committee of the Communist party, admitted today that the Soviet five-year economic plan finished its second year December five per cent below schedule, yet in an editorial the paper today made a great victory all along the line for Communist government.

The biggest defeat was shown in the light industries which showed only an 18 per cent increase over the 23 per cent planned. The heavy industry showed a 28 per cent increase in industries to which the government devoted special attention, this being only 24 per cent below the increase.

The paper is jubilant especially at what it terms the success of the Collective farming, and it claims that the Soviet Union has now a total of 100,000 collective farms, of which 10,000 were established in the last year. It claims that the figures were obtained from the Soviet Union, which it claims to be the most reliable source of information.

CHORUS GIRLS QUIT; WON'T WEAR CORSETS

Associated Press
LONDON, Oct. 23.—The British Chorus Girls' Union today announced its intention to petition the Home Office, protesting against the requirement of wearing corsets by the police.

The union stated that the requirement was "a relic of the past" and that it was "a disgrace to the modern girl." It also stated that the requirement was "a hindrance to the girls' health and comfort."

Saskatchewan Grain Will Be Unthreshed

Associated Press
REINING, Oct. 23.—It is estimated that any of the large amount of Saskatchewan grain which is now in the hands of the United Farmers of Canada, will not be threshed before the end of the year.

The reason for this is that the United Farmers are now in a position to demand a higher price for their grain than the market is willing to pay.

Boys Found Burning Alive In Swampland

Associated Press
MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 23.—Two boys, aged 12 and 13, were found dead in a swampy area near the city of Memphis, Tennessee, today.

The boys were found by a group of men who were searching for a lost dog. They were found in a small, dark, and damp area.

Chicago Show Opening Delayed While Row Is Settled

Bulletin News Special
CHICAGO, Oct. 23.—When that cardinal principle of the stage—the curtain must not be late—was required to some fifty minutes in the case of the Chicago show, a patient audience waited in front of the new theatre, which was to open today.

The delay was caused by a row between the management and the actors over the terms of their contract.

E. Beck, Formerly Montreal, Is Dead

The Hollywood Story

CHAPTER 1

DAN RORIMER had been in Hollywood two weeks when he got an airmail letter from Ziggy Young in New York. Ziggy was on the Herald-Tribune, and he was occupying the apartment in East 42nd street that Rorimer recently vacated to go to Hollywood and a scenario-writing job with Continental Pictures.

Rorimer was in a hurry to get up to his room and change his clothes. It was Saturday afternoon and Paul Collier was going to pick him up to play golf. So when the clerk at the Roosevelt handed him the letter Rorimer stuck it in his pocket and made for the elevators.

Later on, attired in linen knickers and a light blue sweater, he telephoned for a bellboy to bring him some ginger ale and ice and pick up a suit to be pressed.

At the knock on his door he said, "Come in," and Collier entered, triumphantly escorting the grinning Filipino boy and carrying the tray himself.

"Just in time," he announced cheerily. "Playing the nineteenth hole first?"

"I'm hot," said Rorimer, "and I'm thirsty, and I'm not in the best of humor. Help yourself while I clean out the pockets of this suit."

Collier, mixing himself a drink and taking it over to the comfortable arm chair beside the window, said, "What's the matter, Dan? Finding they don't appreciate your talent at Continental?" He stretched his long, well-proportioned frame lazily and reached for one of Rorimer's cigarettes.

Dan grinned. "I learned today that they've cast Fredrick Atwood as the newspaper reporter in 'Grim Holiday.' Can you imagine that sheik doing a convincing job as a newspaper man?"

"You should be glad," Paul Collier told him, "that they're starting at last to make a picture of your story. When they buy them it doesn't always mean that they produce 'em. They do funny things in Hollywood." He sighed. "Hurry up and grab your drink, Dan. I'm parched."

RORIMER tipped the bellboy and dismissed him. "Here's a letter," he said, "from Ziggy Young." He picked up his glass, said, "Here's how," and sat on the bed.

"Down the hatchway," Collier responded mechanically. "What's Ziggy up to?"

Rorimer ripped open the letter, read and frowned. "It's long enough," he said presently. "I'll read the postscript—Ziggy always put his news in a great big P. S. He was never known to put the punch in his lead."

"How much does he want to borrow?" Collier asked lazily, and Rorimer got up from the bed with an oath. "Can you beat that?" he exclaimed. "He wants me to look up some girl friend of his out here and try to get her a job in pictures. Me! . . . Listen:

"P.S.—Be a regular guy for once in your life and do me a favor.—And I've been doing nothing but favors for him ever since I've known him." The small little girl out there in Hollywood from that dear old Tulsa, the town that gave Ziggy Young to the world. Her name is Anne Winter and her family and my family have been just like that ever since my voice started to change."

"That's a long time," said Collier.

"Don't interrupt," said Rorimer. "I've just learned from my mother," he read, "that Anne left for Hollywood about two weeks ago, all fired up with ambition to break into the movies. Her folks don't think much of the idea, but Anne's a trifle bull-headed."

"Most of them are," Collier observed.

"Listen," Rorimer said and continued reading. "I haven't seen Anne for about four months. She was nothing, but a kid then—a trifle leggy and with lots of freckles. If she isn't good looking by this time she never will be, and if you don't look her up and buy her a dinner whenever she's hungry I'll be off you for life. Maybe you can get her a break in the movies. You've got some kind of a pull or you wouldn't be out there yourself. And those big stars like Clara Bow and Dolores Del Rio can't last forever, so why not give Anne a chance?"

"That," Rorimer announced, flinging the letter down on the bed, "is what I call a lot of criss. I should spend my time and money being nice to a friend of Ziggy Young's family down in Tulsa."

Collier was laughing heartily. "You haven't got a chance in the world to duck it," he said. "I'll bet Ziggy's already written to dear little Anne and she'll be expecting to hear from you." He added that the next time he saw Dolores Del Rio he would tell her something to give her a laugh.

COLLIER saw them all. He wrote a daily column on Hollywood for an impressively long list of papers, and spent most of his working hours around the studios or interviewing stars in their homes. Like Rorimer, he had known Ziggy Young in newspaper work in New York, but he and Rorimer had become acquainted only on the latter's arrival in Hollywood. It had been a telegram from Young that had sent him down to meet Rorimer's train, and then, at Ziggy's request, to attempt a practical joke.

Dan Rorimer got his clubs from the closet and announced he was ready to play golf, but Collier said, "Not so fast. You can't throw Ziggy down. The old boy would do as much for you. He's got a heart as big as Collier's."

"As big as a bird seed," said Rorimer.

"Anyway, Dimmy my boy, you can't throw Ziggy down. What's Miss Winter's address?"

"Some place on Romaine street."

"Let me see that letter. I'm going to call up information and see if she has a phone listed."

Anne Winter came from Tulsa to break into the movies.

He busied himself at the telephone and, after getting information, announced that there was no number.

"Got a privately listed telephone, I suppose," said Rorimer, a little better. "Big stuff. Every extra girl in Hollywood has one." He observed that it hadn't taken Anne Winter long to learn the ropes and that it would mean extra trouble to drive out to her address to look her up.

"Send a telegram," said Collier. "Tell her to call you up and leave her phone number."

"All right. And I'll send Ziggy Young a telegram, too."

They went downstairs. At the telephone desk Rorimer wrote a message for Anne Winter, explaining that he was a friend of Ziggy Young's and would like her to get in touch with him at the Roosevelt.

To Ziggy Young he wrote: "Am looking up Miss Winter. I hope you get, murdered in a speakeasy."

Then he and Collier, two slim, well-molded young men in golf tops, proceeded to their game.

It was half-past six or later when Rorimer got back to the hotel. There was a message for him at the desk when he asked for his key. Miss Winter had called in and had left her telephone number, Gladstone 9885.

Upstairs, changing clothes again, Dan gave the matter some thought. He was still indignant at Ziggy Young's habit of taking everything for granted and he didn't relish the idea of chaperoning some movie-struck girl around Hollywood. Why in thunder did people come to Hollywood, anyway, if they didn't have a job lined up? They only added to an already aggravated unemployment problem.

HE CERTAINLY wouldn't have come out here, he told himself as he kicked off his shoes, if he hadn't been given a contract. And he hadn't asked for his job, either. If he had, he probably wouldn't have got it. It had been a case of Continental Pictures liking a couple of his published stories and buying one and taking an option on the other. And then the executive at their New York office had talked about the opportunities for good dialogue writers. And then the contract.

Ziggy Young had called him a lucky dog and Rorimer supposed he was. Lined up in resuscitation of the party he had thrown for some of his newspaper friends. His farewell party. To a man they wished him well, but not one would admit it. They made dire prophecies; they predicted he would be back in New York before summer, with a pair of smoked glasses and a tin cup. And they had sort of poured him out to the train. . . . Oh, well, it was a good party.

His mind went back to Anne Winter. The slip of paper bearing her message lay on the little stand beside his bed. Paul Collier had said, in parting, "Don't forget to call Miss Winter. And if she has a girl friend I'm out of town."

Collier had said he was going to Long Beach. Rorimer picked up the slip of paper and read it again. He thought: "Don't have to call her up—tonight, anyway." Still, he had consulted himself to Ziggy Young, and he had nothing to do tonight.

He rang for some ginger ale and finished dressing. It was warm, February 15, and just like summer. Probably snowing in New York, he thought. He hoped Ziggy Young was knee deep in slush, covering a fire or something.

When the bellboy came Rorimer filled a glass, drank it and picked up the telephone. "Gladstone 9885," he said.

"Hello," he said, "is this Miss Anne Winter?"

"This is Dan Rorimer, Ziggy Young's friend. You got my telegram, I see?"

Miss Winter said she had and that it was kind of him to take the trouble to call and that it was nice to hear from one of Ziggy Young's friends.

HEIR voice was pleasing. Rorimer was, altogether, unexpected to find it so. Nice and low, and he had expected a strident sound, full of freckles and long legs. It had popped in his mind that that his owner knew exactly what to do with it.

For an awkward moment he paused. Then he said, "Well how do you like Hollywood?" And thought immediately that it sounded very silly.

"I'm in love with what I've seen of it," said Miss Winter. "You see, I've had a rather bad cold and have had to stay in. I'm not," she hastened to add, "blaming it on your climate. I caught it on the train coming out."

She was not.

Rorimer laughed. "I'm not a Californian," he said. "I'm a stranger here too."

"Oh, really? That encourages me."

Rorimer said he felt a little encouraged himself and glanced toward the tray on the writing desk. "Are you busy this evening?" he ventured.

"That's fine," Rorimer said. "If you haven't eaten, perhaps you'd like to dine with me. If you're at all like me, you're not crazy about eating alone."

"I think that would be lovely," said Miss Winter. "I was just about to go out to dinner when you called."

"It's a date then," said Rorimer. "And later maybe we can dance—unless you think your cold . . ."

"Yes, I'm entirely over it now. And I'd like to, very much."

Rorimer said he would be over as soon as she was ready. "We needn't dress unless you want to."

"Then I'll be ready when you arrive."

He hung up the receiver feeling decidedly better. He even felt friendly once more toward Ziggy Young. Standing before his dresser mirror he gave a final careful adjustment to his tie and with military brusqued did a little unnecessary work on his hair.

It was brown hair, rather wavy and of a slightly coarse texture that, once combed, required little attention. But Rorimer brushed it anyway—straight back above the ears, and glanced critically at the part. A tanned reflection looked back at him from the glass, strong-mouthed, firm of chin and blue of eyes, a not unpromising face, especially with regard to the eyes, which had little laughter wrinkles at the sides and were intense in their blues.

Rorimer's watch showed a quarter after seven. He slipped on his coat and selected a fresh handkerchief and stood tall and straight before the glass while he put on the hat that he wore only at night. His days since coming to southern California were larcadeous ones.

A block away from the hotel was the garage where he kept his car, a sturdy roadster of low price but sporty lines. The evening, he reflected, climbing in behind the wheel, might turn out rather well after all. A girl with a voice like Anne Winter's he told himself, would have to possess more than ordinary charm or else the whole world was wrong. He hummed a few bars from the theme song of a new picture as he drove.

HE brought his car to a stop presently in front of a small apartment building and found, after looking at the letter boxes in the vestibule, that Miss Anne Winter lived in Number Two. A door opened half way down the ground floor corridor in answer to his ring and the "blind date" came advancing to meet him.

She said, "Hello, Mr. Rorimer," in a nice comradely manner. "You see I was ready."

Dan, feeling her warm handclasp and noting the brilliant perfection of teeth revealed by her smiling lips, vowed that he would send Ziggy Young a couple of the finest tips on Hollywood Boulevard. His "How do you do, Miss Winter?" sounded stiffly formal to him and entirely inadequate. Holding the street door open for her to pass through ahead of him, he murmured something about hoping he hadn't kept her waiting too long for dinner.

"Of course not," she assured him. "You got out here so quickly you must have flown."

Rorimer said, "Well, here's my airplane—hop in."

"Are you a good pilot?" she asked.

"Perfectly trustworthy as long as my mind is on my work," he assured her, and was rewarded by the pleasant sound of her low-pitched laugh which told him that none of the implications of his remark had escaped her.

"Now then," Rorimer said, climbing in beside her, "where away?" Any choice in the matter of eating places?"

"She told him she preferred to leave the choice to him. 'I really haven't been around much—honestly. You don't know what a conscientious invalid I've been. I've obeyed the doctor's orders absolutely—in bed every night by nine for a whole week.' But I mustn't bore you, talking about a cold in the head. Anyway, I'm feeling gorgeous now."

Rorimer resisted a temptation to tell her that she looked the same way. Her eyes, dark and wide and vivid, shone brightly in the gloom of the car and her hair, he suspected, must be coal black beneath the tight-fitting, helmet-shaped hat.

He said, "Have you been to the Brown Derby?"

"Just once—for lunch."

"Let me see, now. Would you like to go to the Blossom Room at the Roosevelt? That's a good place to eat and dance, but it's a little early. I'll tell you; let's have dinner at the Brown Derby and then go to the Blossom Room to dance."

She nodded her head vigorously. "Check!"

"We're taking off. Stand by for a hop," he said, and swung the car around in the street in a tight arc.

SOME minutes later, as they were being shown in a table in the restaurant, Rorimer heard someone call, "Hello, Dan," and he turned to see a young man waving to him from one of the tables along the bar.

Rorimer said, "Hello, Johnny," and saluted, and when he helped Anne Winter with her coat he informed her, "That's Johnny Hiddle. He's a free-lance press agent. And the girl with him is Olivia Marsden."

"I saw her as we came in," Anne Winter said. "I've heard a lot about her, of course. I think she's just lovely. I'm tempted to turn and stare."

"Lots of people do," Rorimer said. "I'll have to tell you about Johnny later. He's quite a boy. You see, he has a bunch of movie stars for clients—Olivia Marsden is one—and he falls in love with every one in turn. . . . Shall I order for you?"

She nodded. "I'd love to have you. It's so comforting to have someone do it for you."

"It's a gift," said Rorimer, laughing. "I merely choose what I want myself and then double the order."

Nevertheless, she was over to the telegram with considerable care and turned now and then to take a question of the waiter.

When he had finished and offered her a cigarette, which she declined with a murmured "No, thanks—not before meals," she leaned across the table toward him and said, "And now you'll have to tell me all about yourself."

Rorimer smiled, and his nose exuded thin streams of smoke.

"All?" he said.

"Well, all you discreetly can."

"Well, I'll give you a tabloid version. Born in Knoxville, Tennessee. Went to school at Vanderbilt. Worked on a paper in Nashville, and another one in Detroit. Went to New York and worked on a couple of more there. Met Ziggy Young on the Herald-Tribune and roomed with him for a while. When I went over to the Telegram we split up. Ziggy having night hours and I working days. Not so good for sleeping, if you know what I mean."

She nodded and smiled.

Rorimer continued. "Wrote a short story while I was at the Telegram, based on a murder story I covered. Much to my surprise, it was accepted. Wrote another one about a certain high-bat prizefighter and that was accepted. Then I got a swellish head and listened too attentively to my literary agent, who advised me to give up newspaper work and write 12 short stories and a play. Two of the stories were accepted. The play is still sticking around Broadway and by this time must have been turned down by every producer in New York."

HE stopped. "Still interested?"

"She nodded eagerly."

"All right, if you want. Two out of 12 is not so good—especially at the price I got. I'm scared wryly at some recollection as he explained that more than once during his year of free-lance he had regretted divorcing himself from a weekly payroll. Pride, he said, was the only thing that had kept him from going back to ask for his old newspaper jobs—pride and the cool-matured razing his old associates would have given him."

"They used to call me O. Henry and ask me if I was eating regularly. I always did," he said, studying the cigarette in his fingers, "but toward the last I was going without lunch and trying to kill myself that three meals a day was too much."

"Then Miss Hunt—my agent—told one of my stories to Continental Pictures." He stopped abruptly and extinguished his cigarette at sight of her waiter returning.

Anne Winter watched him attentively. She was a good listener. She rested her elbows on the table, supporting her chin in her hands. She looked back now at the water-placed dishes before them, but said, when he had departed again, "You haven't finished. I can't eat until I hear the rest."

There was, Rorimer said, little else to tell. Someone at Continental had thought of liked Rorimer's stuff, and would offer him a contract. "Someone without much judgment. . . . And that's the end of the story."

His depressing thought of telling it gave Anne Winter the impression that he was not too fond of talking about himself. She said gravely, "I'm sure that's not the end; it's just the beginning for you."

"You're very kind," Rorimer said, "but now that I'm here they don't know what to do with me." He added that he guessed he was lucky. "In fact," he said, eyeing her with laughing but bold intensity, "I know I'm lucky."

She laughed delightedly, a pleasing low ripple of sound, but tucked her head in pretended confusion. Rorimer liked the way her long lashes swept her cheeks when her eyes lowered.

"Have they made a picture yet from your story?" she asked. "What is the name of it?"

Rorimer said that production was about to start. "Grim Holiday," he said, was his story. "But Lord knows what they'll call it when they're through with it."

He speaks with a shade of resentment. Anne Winter, watching him, thought she saw rebellion in his eyes and in the set of his lean jaw.

WILL ANNE WINTER MAKE THE GRADE IN HOLLYWOOD?

She learns that the chances for success are slim and that few from the vast army of extras ever achieve it. In the next installment Rorimer learns a few things about this girl from Tulsa and he gives her an idea of what she may expect.

ROSENBLUM VICTOR OVER NEWARK BOY

Clown Prince of Harlem Wins on Technical Knockout

BY EDWARD J. NEIL
Associated Press Sports Writer

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, Oct. 22.—Maurice Rosenbloom, champion of all the light-heavyweight weight cutters, defeated young Louis Magallon, a contender from Newark, N. J., in a technical knockout last night in the seventh round of one of the poorest title matches ever staged here.

Although the battle was scheduled to go fifteen rounds, many of the 4,000 customers who crowded into the arena at the time of the fight cut the fight off at the eighth round, when Rosenbloom, a middleweight who has done most of his fighting in New York, was forced to hit the bell. There had been no knockdowns. The seventh round lasted 1 minute, 47 seconds.

Rosenbloom, a middleweight who has done most of his fighting in New York, was forced to hit the bell. There had been no knockdowns. The seventh round lasted 1 minute, 47 seconds.

By the eighth round, Rosenbloom, in top condition, landed a good combination, followed by a right hand, which landed on the chin, sending the challenger right to the floor, and generally making the referee for a youngster who had an almost total lack of idea of what to do under the circumstances. Early in the third round Magallon started a series of blows from which he never recovered. Rosenbloom, who had a good chin, took the blows and gradually widened.

In the eleventh round, with his chin a sorry figure staggering around the ring, leading from the south and round as well as the crowd, Magallon found an overhand right that he had seen the crowd and started a series of blows from which he never recovered. Rosenbloom, who had a good chin, took the blows and gradually widened.

COAST HOCKEY LEAGUE PLANS NEW SCHEDULE

Inter-league Games With Californian Teams in Prospect

VANCOUVER, B. C., Oct. 22.—The only disadvantage we can see to playing inter-league games with the California Hockey League is that Vancouver and Seattle clubs would have to give up one of their regular home games to make a trip to the south, and play a series with the Californian team. This, too, would involve the playing of two games in a week when the southern team come north to play. Such was the answer of Frank Patrick, president of the Pacific Coast League, forming an alliance with the Californian club.

"Pack and Portland" continued Patrick, "are all in favor of the new idea. Vancouver and Seattle are just waiting on the project. Making date for their chief objection. Of course, nothing definite can be said until the league holds its annual meeting in Tacoma, December. It is a matter for the league to decide."

Little Girls' Coats

Cosy All-Wool Fabrics Smartly Trimmed

LUCKY the mothers who have yet to choose a cosy coat for a tiny girl of 2 to 6 years. Bargain Day brings us a special grouping of models on which the savings offered are exceptionally generous.

All-wool velour of a heavy downy warmth—blanket cloth with a soft plaid interwoven in its texture—supple broadcloth—these are the fabrics. The furs that fashion cosy upstanding collars and cuffs are of mink, lapin or thibetina. Warm interlinings are covered with linings of broadened rayon and cotton. Sizes 2 to 6 years.
